This spectacular residence at the foot of Frenchman Mountain in Las Vegas is a never-ending adventure of style and grace. All the upgrading and customizing through-out the home and gardens was meticulously done by the owners themselves. Having been raised in a family that owned a home building company, the Dad learned at an early age how to master the trades. His work in his own home included crafting the granite counters, oak flooring, oak railing on staircase, wood floors, tile floors, custom ceilings fans, window treatments, oak staircase, cabinets, LED lighting, vaulted, angle & tray ceilings, crown molding, elevated family room, as well as the outside digging and planting of the gardens.

The main house is 4,028 square feet with six large bedrooms, with a seventh bedroom if you count the theater room which features two hidden queen-sized Murphy beds. It also has four full bathrooms, a recreation room with a billiard/pool table, vaulted and angle ceilings, and chandeliers. The main house was originally built by Coventry Homes. The 721-square foot guest house in the back, also built by the homeowners, has two bedrooms, a living room with
